Related Practices: Land Use - Transactional

Miller Starr Regalia (MSR), a preeminent California real estate law firm for over 50 years, announced today that Kevin Corbett, who has more than 20 years of experience in commercial real estate and corporate law, is joining the firm's real estate transactional practice in its Walnut Creek headquarters.

Prior to joining MSR, Corbett was a partner at Horner & Singer in Walnut Creek where he represented developers, owners, investors, and tenants in all forms of commercial real estate transactions, including acquisitions and dispositions, commercial leasing, real estate secured finance, joint ventures, private offerings, tenancy-in-common agreements, development agreements, construction agreements, and all aspects of the ownership and operation of commercial real estate.

Corbett's commercial real estate practice focuses on retail shopping center development, acquisitions and dispositions and representation of both landlords and tenants in retail, office and industrial leasing. He represents developers in negotiation and documentation of joint ventures and private offerings, tenants in the negotiation and documentation of retail and office leases and landowners in the negotiation and documentation of leases for retail, industrial and office space. He also has experience as outside general counsel to privately held companies.

"Kevin's two decades of experience in both commercial real estate and corporate law will provide additional depth to MSR's growing transactional practice," said Anthony M. Leones, Miller Starr Regalia managing shareholder. "He is equally adept working with developers, owners, investors and tenants and handling retail, industrial or office negotiations and transactions."

Corbett received his B.A. from the University of Pennsylvania and his J.D. from Tulane University Law School. He is admitted to practice in California.

MSR's Transactional Practice Group works with clients involved in commercial matters as well as every aspect of the real estate industry, including leading international technology firms, national and regional retailers, shopping center developers, residential, retail, mixed-use, hospitality and industrial developers, banks and other financial institutions, management companies, and real estate entrepreneurs. The Group handles the structuring and negotiating of complex transactions and due diligence investigations throughout the United States.
