Miller Starr Regalia (MSR), a preeminent California real estate law firm for more than 50 years, announced today that CEQA Developments has been recognized in the Global Top 200 Law Firm Blogs list by Practice Source and House of Butter.

"It's an honor for our firm, and personally gratifying to me, for our CEQA blog to receive this recognition as a leading publication. For me, it has definitely been a labor – mostly of love –for these past 11-plus years trying to keep up with and capture all the published cases, statutes and other developments related to our State's signature environmental law. These important legal developments profoundly impact our State's built and natural environments, as well as our clients' businesses, properties, and jurisdictions, and we seek to timely share those developments and our insights with our clients, CEQA practitioners, and interested stakeholders and members of the public" said MSR shareholder Arthur F. Coon, who is the principal author and curator of the blog's posts. "We look forward to continuing the blog's mission to examine relevant CEQA developments and their important implications for our State."

Published for the first time this year by Practice Source and House of Butter, the Global Top 200 Law Firm Blogs recognizes the top legal blogs exclusively written by lawyers. The list features the 200 best legal blogs written by lawyers, barristers, and law firms from around the world. Blogs included in the list adhere to a main topic, provide easy access to content, and are frequently updated, with an average of five posts per month.

For more than 50 years, MSR has been at the forefront of recent developments in cutting edge fields such as air quality and climate change-related laws, and its attorneys are established experts in environmental impact review of projects under the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA). CEQA Developments, was the firm's first blog, written to highlight its experience in the area of CEQA law.
